

There is a lot to say on what results from the application of liberal principles to modern capitalism. But we cannot pursue such commentary without providing a clear conception of the very principles which we set out to discuss. The very term liberalism has been so diverted from its original conception that before any discussion about liberal ideas one must, so to speak, rescue its true meaning from the fog amidst which it is hidden.